THE REVOLT OF LABOUR.

One of the most significant signs of the times. which peliticians would do well to note, is the growth of a conscious and organised reaction against what is called the Labour Movement of the last six or seven years. Everyone possessing an inside knowledge of the subject and not wilfully blind has long been aware that a great mass of opposition to this movement has existed among the working classes from the first, but until recently it has been a dead weight, voiceless, ident, and therefore unrecognised by the general public, amid the din and dust raised by the new unionism. A few figures will usefully emphasise this striking fact. According to the last census there are in this country about nine millions of adult working men but the nominal roll of trade unionists, which is considerably in excess of the real number, is only one million. Taken at their own valuation, then, the trade unions only represent 112 per cent. of the labour population, while the remaining 88.8 per cent. deliberately decline to join. And, secondly, even among unicolate a strong dislike of the new movement bus been repeatedly displayed. They have been "called out" on strike in its support again and again, and have fiaily refused to come. It is not so very long since Mr. Havelock Wilson and other renowned "leaders" were calling everybody out at frequent intervals on behalf of the principle of the new uniquism. They used to talk with bated breath of the awful struggle impending in spile of their atmost afforts to evert it; how that on such and such a day so many millions of men would leave work and paralyse the entire business of the country, &c., &c. They tried their hardest to carry out this genial programme, but the best and strongest of the unions would have none of it: and when one of their foolish strikes did onme off, in every case a large proportion of the men only followed the call under protest to save themselves from violence, and took the earliest opportunity of joining hands with free labour and throwing up the cause. An organised revolt has at last broken out in the ranks of labour -a revolt against the policy and the methods of those who have so long misrepresented its wishes and damaged its interests.

The new departure has come at the right time when a general election is looming in the dim but by no means distant future, and politicians therefore, of the real aspirations of Labour is all-important. If they were commensurate with the new unionism, as some profess to believe, then we should be forthwith committed to a period of purely Socialistic legislation. That is the avowed programme of the new Labour "bosses" and of the Trades Union Congress which they have captured. The partioular Socialism they affect is very simple and intelligible, and may be summed up in the words.

"Down with Capital!". They want the "nationalisation " of everything, the means of production to be handed over to "the State," &c., &c., and the first step is the abolition of the capital. ist. Of course the newspapers which, for com- F. mercial reasons, champ on these statesmen, being Bat. all capitalist journals, do not openly support this Socialistic programme, but cover it up under the more agreeable and indefinite term "collectivism: " but abov' 'ne new unionists themselves !

n justice, no noncealment Tuthere is we inscrib d "Down with w. who te ver. capital!" willing for all the world to see." and the legislation they demand has that object in view directly or indirectly.
